

Four archetypes. Infinite variations.

Every person who has ever submitted to ARXEVY falls within one of four fundamental orientations. But your archetype is not your identity — it is the lens through which you engage with the world. Two Catalysts from different continents may share the same orientation and have nothing else in common.

0.1

Architect

Strategy, systems, long-term thinking.
Building structures.

"You saw the system before anyone else noticed it was broken."

0.2

Catalyst

Creativity, disruption, innovation.
Questioning norms.

"You have never accepted the world as it was handed to you."

0.3

Anchor

Empathy, community, relationships.
Emotional

"People tell you things they have never told anyone else."

0.4

Operator

Execution, persistence, problem-solving.
Precision.

"The distance between your ideas and their execution is very short."

You wrote it when no one was watching.

Every college essay, every SOP, every personal statement contains something most social platforms never capture — the unedited version of who you are. ARXEVO reads that document and maps the architecture of your identity. Not what you want to project. What you actually are.

The result is a character arc — your archetype, your origin story, your trait map — that belongs to no one else, because no one else wrote what you wrote.
